A paper published in Science in 2004 explored quantum tunneling in the polymeric structure of DNA, a concept at the early stages of DNA studies. The paper confirmed a long-standing idea that the DNA double helix had a 'crumpled' state.
A paper published in Nature in 2012 revisited the previous study and found errors in the earlier work. In 2014, Supekar published a paper on the DNA methylation, its effects on gene expression and other processes and the controversy surrounding the present understanding of this process. This work was built on earlier work. Rearranging various studies and unpublished works spanning four decades, Supekar wrote a book on biochemistry to explain in detail the structure and function of biomolecules. Awards and honors The Indian government has conferred him several awards for his contributions in science and technology. These include the Padma Shri in 2014 for his contribution to the fields of science and technology. Supekar has also received several awards from the Indian Academy of Sciences and the Maharashtra

Academy of Sciences and Research. The National Academy of Sciences, India, has cited some of his works in its awards to Indian scientists. In 2017, the St. Catharines Arts Council presented him the "Bravo! Award" for his "outstanding accomplishment and innovation". In 2018, Supekar was selected by the Asahi Shimbun and BBC as one of the six news makers in South Asia. In 2014, Supekar was named one of the 11 Renaissance Men of the world by the American Institute of Medicine. Supekar is married to Sujata, a medical practitioner, and they have a
