Funding ===== This study was financed by the Ministry of Health in the frame of the project "Better Care", Wroclaw, Poland. It's no secret that as a movie genre of yore, film noir is struggling to stick with audiences who are tired of seeing the same old things over and over. No one wants to watch the same heroes and same fights over and over again. Instead, we get Black Mirror, or maybe more of a personal preference... nostalgia. One of the great things about the

at residue 210 influences the conformation of the  $\alpha$ - and  $\beta$ -tubulin heterodimers. Protein modifications have a significant impact on the cell, by modulating their structure and function. Glutamylation of tubulin is a post-translational modification that affects its polymerization and microtubule dynamics. Tubulin glutamylation impacts its stability, and it is hypothesized that it might regulate the interactions between tubulin protofilaments. Through a mutagenesis approach, we investigated the impact of glutamylation on the stability and conformation of the tubulin heterodimers. We found that glutamylation of tubulin changes the secondary structure and the flexibility of tubulin dimers. The glutamylation also reduces the strength of the dimer interface. Furthermore, we showed that glutamylated tubulin associates with polymerized cytoplasmic microtubules and regulates their dynamics. Together, our results support the idea that glutamylation may regulate the interaction between tubulin protofilaments. BRUSSELS
